While it may not be true that timing is everything, it is certainly important. Take, for example, leadership of the Gardens. We have had outstanding board chairs for decades, and each one seems to step into the position at just the right moment. In January, we welcomed our new leader, Mary Lee Chin, who has been an engaged board member for over a decade. Her dedication, her compassion and her big vision for what we should be and can be made all the difference in her selection. Great example: She is committed to taking the Gardens to a new level of impact when it comes to mental health.

It’s hard to imagine an issue more significant today than the restoration of people’s ability to thrive in the modern world. The last several years have given us all new challenges, not the least of which was the impact of COVID-19. We know that coming through these times can be a precarious process for many of our members, volunteers, guests, staff and donors. The Gardens has become a refuge and a place for spiritual restoration. It is that deep sense of connection to nature that propels us forward to making decisions with better perspective and greater kindness toward all life on Earth. Mary Lee understands this deeply and will no doubt help us recruit the talented partners that we need to ensure that the Gardens does everything we can to help lighten the load of people who are carrying such enormous burdens today.

A personal note, I am always amazed when there is a selection process that leads to a candidate like Mary Lee and, when we pitch them on the idea, they say yes. It’s a big responsibility and it’s something no one has ever taken lightly. So, thank you for saying yes, Mary Lee. You have become not only a champion for the Gardens, but you have also become a great friend to many of us and an inspiration to all of us.

One more thought about timing: It turns out that in 2025 the Gardens celebrates 50 years of management of Chatfield Farms—just in the nick of time, as we will be cutting a ribbon on the phase one projects of the new Master Development Plan for Chatfield Farms this spring. Sometimes it takes a while—even 50 years—to take a giant step, but we’re doing that now and it will mean tremendous new opportunities for all our members and friends.

Onward.

MASTERFUL SPACES

By Jen Lucas, Associate Director of Horticulture

Robert and Judi Newman Welcome Center

Amazing transformations are taking place at Chatfield Farms as phase one of the Master Development Plan nears completion. Among the finished projects are the Robert and Judi Newman Welcome Center, with paved and landscaped parking; Borgen Family Market Square, an outdoor event space; and a Rest Stop on the south side of the property. With the new buildings and event space came opportunities for additional gardens.

The Robert and Judi Newman Welcome Center is adorned with rain gardens, xeriscape gardens and the showpiece Crevice Garden that greets visitors as they enter Chatfield Farms. The rain garden captures and infiltrates stormwater runoff from the building and the parking area. The Welcome Center roof is designed so that all the rainwater drains on the west side, into the garden. Each swale in the parking lot is a rain garden, too, irrigated by storm water. The plant palette here mainly consists of native prairie plants, which have deep root systems that prevent erosion, help with filtration of pollutants and are more efficient at utilizing the water and nutrients available in our soil. These plants have also adapted to periodic drought but can handle occasional heavy precipitation events.

With fewer than 16 inches of annual rainfall, the Denver metro area's high plains environment demands water-wise landscaping. We planted a xeriscape garden at the front of the Welcome Center, featuring plants that thrive with minimal irrigation while providing color throughout the season. After passing through the Welcome Center, guests are greeted by the Crevice Garden—designed by Didier Design Studio in collaboration with our horticulturists—which showcases a distinctly Colorado aesthetic to drought-tolerant gardening.

The Borgen Family Market Square is designed with a large lawn, perfect for relaxing under unique shade trees. A pergola will provide a covered structure for musicians during Lavender Festival or other events that use this welcoming space. A large seasonal tent will house our weekly Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) distributions during the growing season and will be available for private rentals.

These exciting additions and changes bring new opportunities and experiences for visitors, volunteers and staff. We are all grateful to Brian Vogt, our CEO, who has supported this vision, and we appreciate the many generous donors who have helped create a beautiful and educational place for all to enjoy. Thanks also to G.H. Phipps Construction Companies for their work on another Denver Botanic Gardens construction project. Come to Chatfield Farms and see the new spaces—and gardens—for yourself.

GROWING INSPIRATION – American Impressionism

AND THE GARDEN MOVEMENT

By Katie Foster, Curatorial Coordinator

Impressionism revolutionized the art world when it emerged in France in 1874. Artists like Edgar Degas, Claude Monet and Pierre-Auguste Renoir broke away from traditional painting styles in favor of loose, visible brushstrokes and light-filled atmospheres. Instead of capturing precise and realistic details, Impressionism focused on rendering fleeting moments, movement and the ever-changing qualities of light and shadow.

After the American Civil War, many artists traveled to Paris to study in academies and museums. Impressionism made its mark on these artists, who adapted elements of its style to depict life back home in the United States. F. Childe Hassam, for example, painted bustling cityscapes that evoke the clamor and motion of urban life, whereas artists like Mary Cassatt and Frederick Carl Frieseke used Impressionist techniques to portray intimate, domestic moments.

Impressionism arrived in America at a time of major social and economic change. By the early 20th century, new railroad developments facilitated the growth of expansive suburbs outside of urban centers. Middle-class Americans found themselves with more land and leisure time. Gardening quickly became a national obsession, reflecting Progressive-era ideals that emphasized the beautification of public and private places and a renewed connection with nature. Unlike the meticulously manicured formal gardens of wealthy estates, middle class gardeners favored more personal spaces that felt like outdoor extensions of their homes. This collective fervor for gardening came to be known as the Garden Movement, and it laid the groundwork for the American lawns and gardens we think of today.

Impressionists preferred to paint en plein air (in the open air), and artists found inspiration in naturalistic gardens flourishing across the country. Some artists, like John Henry Twachtman, were avid gardeners themselves. His home in Greenwich, Connecticut, became a popular painting destination for fellow American Impressionists. Hassam, who spent summers in his studio on Appledore Island, Maine, summed it up best when he said, “Art is to me the interpretation of the impression which nature makes upon the eye and brain.”

American Impressionism and the history of American gardens are linked in surprising ways. Discover these connections and more at Blue Grass, Green Skies: American Impressionism and Realism.

CRAFTING CREATURE COMFORTS

By Kevin Philip Williams, Manager of Horticulture

Reimagining the Birds and Bees Walk challenged us to explore how human creativity can merge with natural processes to foster biodiversity. To that end, we installed an eclectic array of diverse structures—such as insect hotels, material libraries, standing dead wood, rock piles, brush piles, dead hedges and log walls—to create complex habitats where life can thrive. Each feature reflects the unique shelter needs of multitudes of species: arthropods nest in plant stems, leaf detritus, and hollow branches; birds and mammals take refuge in tangled brush and gather fibers for nests; amphibians seek cool, damp spots, while reptiles bask on sun-warmed surfaces.

One of the largest structures in the garden, the “wood wave,” is a prime example of a structure teeming with inner life. This 25-foot dead hedge, woven from pruned branches and garden debris, offers countless crevices and hollows for shelter and nesting. Another habitat structure, the “cocoon,” serves as an extensive material library—a place where creatures can gather what they need to build shelter. Often dismissed as waste or mulch, organic materials like leaves and pine needles are offered up in woolen pockets, alongside fibrous materials like grass, cotton and flax that hang throughout the structure.

These organic structures blend artistry with ecological function, highlighting the beauty in spaces created for non-human inhabitants. True beauty emerges when we consider what other beings find beautiful, what they find useful, what attracts them. By embracing this perspective, we cultivate a deeper connection with the natural world, supporting life through thoughtful, intentional design.

NEW PARTNERSHIPS TO IMPROVE URBAN WILDLIFE HABITAT: BOTANIC GARDENS AND GOLF COURSE ASSOCIATIONS

By Rebecca Hufft, Associate Director of Climate Resilience

Photos by Leah Veldhuisen

As we work to conserve and restore wildlife and ecosystems, urban areas become progressively more important areas of focus. Denver Botanic Gardens has partnered with the Colorado Golf Association to boost biodiversity on CommonGround Golf Course, located on the former Lowry Air Force Base straddling the cities of Aurora and Denver. While the golf course is already home to deer, coyotes, hawks and other wildlife, we aim to increase native plant diversity in these areas to create better habitats, especially for pollinators.

Following a floristic inventory of the golf course in 2022, we trialed a seeding experiment in the rough areas to enhance plant diversity. We are testing methods that utilize existing course equipment and can be easily implemented at other sites. Without removing the existing turf, we created minimal soil disturbance through harrowing and aerating before scattering a native forb (flowering plant) seed mix in December 2022. While still early, results suggest this low-impact approach is successfully promoting forb germination. To further support establishment, we are also mowing to prevent non-native grasses from going to seed and encourage continued growth of the native forbs.

Last summer, we observed pollinators to establish baseline data for the site and see if our initial efforts are having an impact on their visitation. Even with minimal native forb growth in these plots, both bee activity and overall pollinator visitations rose. Surprisingly, despite the overall low density of plants that emerged from the seeding treatment, there was a significant increase in pollinators observed relative to the unseeded plots. This shows that even a modest increase in forbs can improve pollinator numbers. Ideally, we would see a greater visual impact and higher density of native plants in the restoration plots. However, this pilot experiment demonstrates that this relatively easy and inexpensive way to improve habitat works for pollinators. This technique could be useful in areas where additional site preparation is not feasible or as a temporary solution until larger restoration and clearing of existing vegetation can take place.

We will continue developing methods that improve habitat on golf courses and similar areas so this work can be scaled up. Golf courses are one of the largest open spaces in urban and surrounding areas. They provide wildlife habitats and corridors and present a partnership opportunity for public gardens to improve biodiversity and strengthen conservation efforts while engaging with and educating new audiences.

SUSTAINABLE BEAUTY

By Blake Burger, Associate Director of Horticulture and Curator, and Julia Pearson, Horticulturist

Turf grass requires frequent watering, which can strain local water resources, especially during Colorado’s hot summer months. Denver Water estimates that 50% of the annual water usage of single-family households is applied to lawns and other outdoor areas. By selectively replacing traditional grass with low-water perennials, we can significantly reduce water consumption and lower water bills—an eco-friendly choice that supports sustainability and cost savings.

As part of our commitment to sustainability, the Gardens removed the turf on the east side of the York Street right of way in 2023. The turf previously required an average of 180,000 gallons of water per year. In the first year after converting the area to mixed perennials, water usage dropped dramatically to approximately 47,000 gallons. The following year, due to an unusually hot summer, usage rose to 101,000 gallons—but this was still a substantial reduction compared to the original turf requirements.

In addition to water savings, replacing grass with perennials fosters greater biodiversity. Turf grass, often composed of a single species, provides limited habitat for local wildlife. By replacing it with a diverse range of plants, which are adapted to the unique conditions of Denver’s urban areas, we can create habitats for pollinators, birds and beneficial insects. The varied plant life also helps support soil health and promotes a more resilient ecosystem.

This transformation enhances the beauty of our urban landscapes as well. Dry shade perennials such as Corylus avellana 'Contorta' (corkscrew hazel), Anemone hupehensis (Japanese anemone) and Ceratostigma plumbaginoides (hardy plumbago) offer a range of seasonal interest with varied textures and colors, providing a lush and vibrant appearance that changes throughout the year. Sun loving plants, such as Ericameria nauseosa var. nauseosa (rabbitbrush), Prunus pumila var. besseyi (Western sand cherry) and Epilobium canum ssp. garrettii (ORANGE CARPET® hummingbird trumpet) are great options for hot sidewalk-adjacent areas. This transformation not only improves the visual appeal of streets but also contributes to the overall greening of Denver’s urban spaces.

Water conservation is essential in Denver’s semi-arid climate. Swap turf for low-water perennials and create a smart, sustainable landscape that is also beautiful and low-maintenance. It benefits both the environment and the community.

GROSS, WHAT'S THAT SMELL?

By Scott Preusser, Assistant Curator

The compulsion to smell a stinking flower is as irresistible as the morbid curiosity that draws people to the aftermath of a car crash. Sapromyophily is the ability of a plant to attract carrion beetles and dung flies for pollination through mimicry of their food and brood sites. Sapromyophilous flowers, also known as carrion, corpse or stinking flowers, emit an odor that smells like rotting flesh and feces, which first attracts and then tricks scavenging flies and beetles into performing the important task of pollination. Some of the more popular genera that utilize this deceptive strategy include: Amorphophallus, Rafflesia, Crassula, Stapelia, Huernia and Bulbophyllum.

New research has shown that the odor is often combined with additional tricks that contribute to the mimesis of a decaying corpse, such as flowers in shades of red, brown and purple, and setae, the short fuzzy hairs that wave like emerging fly larvae. The smell is thick and foul: like magnified body odor with about 31% rotting fish on top.

Gas Chromatography-Mass Spectrometry (GCMS), a technique used to identify and analyze scent compounds, detected 123 of the 152 volatile compounds in these flowers. Interestingly, both fungus and flowering plants (angiosperms) share scent compounds identical to those found in true carrion and feces. These means of attracting pollinators are very effective and scientists now know that successful pollination depends heavily on the emission of volatile compounds. As Shakespeare wrote, “A rose by any other name would smell just as sweet” – but the same could be said for the stench of these flowers.

CHILDREN & FAMILY PROGRAMS

Strolling Stories at Chatfield Farms

Tuesdays, April and May,
9:30 a.m. and 10:45 a.m.

$11, $9 member

Story time combined with nature hikes. Investigate nature as it changes with the seasons. Along the trail we stop to read a seasonally themed story and then continue our adventure with an exploration based on the day's book. Best for families with preschoolers ages 3-6.

Cub Scout Make and Take: Tabletop Greenhouse Gardens

Saturday, April 12, 9:15 a.m.,
10:45 a.m. and 1 p.m.

$12 per project

All levels of Cub Scouts are invited! Plant seeds in eco-friendly seed-starting pots and then build a miniature tabletop greenhouse to take home. Then explore the Gardens with a scavenger hunt that investigates plants as they prepare for the changing seasons. Pre-registration is required.

Girl Scout Juniors: Create a Garden Exploration Day

Saturday, May 17, 9 a.m.,
10:45 a.m. or 12:45 p.m.

$12 per scout, $7 per adult,
$7 non-participating sibling

Discover the basics of garden design and learn how to plan for a successful garden. Plant and decorate a miniature container garden to take home. This program supports the Juniors Gardener Badge. Pre-registration is required.

ADULT PROGRAMS

Rooted in Clay: Ceramics Workshop with Stone Bear Studios

Friday, April 25, 9:30-11:30 a.m. or
Wed, May 21 or June 18, 5:30-7:30 p.m.

$90, $85 member

Join the staff from Stone Bear Studios to create a clay masterpiece inspired by our natural surroundings. Each month will showcase different techniques and projects.

Hypertufa Container – Make and Plant Your Own (Two-day workshop)

Friday, April 25 & May 2, 10 a.m. – noon

$56, $52 member

Learn the technique for making your own lightweight hypertufa pot. Once the containers dry and cure, we meet again to plant and top-dress your new creation. All materials to make your pot plus a wonderful selection of plants are included.

Embroidery as Meditation: Connecting to the Natural World

Thursday, May 15, 22 & 29, 4-6 p.m.

$108, $103 member

With the plants at the Gardens as inspiration, use various techniques to create patterns and shapes and then translate into embroidery pieces.

Journaling for Beginners

Wednesday, May 14, 6-7:30 p.m.

$35, $30 member

Discover the various types of journals you can keep and reap the benefits of creating a journaling practice, such as organization, emotional processing and inspiring creativity.

Exploring Cheeses with So Damn Gouda

Wednesday, May 21 or June 18, 5-6 p.m.

$42, $38 member

Learn about the main cheese-making regions and the history of cheese. Sample 5-6 pairings that exemplify the region of the month. If you have a favorite bottle of wine that you like to pair with cheese, bring it!

THE POLLINATOR PIT STOP

IN TWO STEPS

By Helena Nitz, Family and Children's Program Coordinator

Whether they are a floating butterfly or a buzzing bee, pollinators are popular! To say thank you for all the hard work our pollinators put into helping our plants reproduce and grow, let's create a place for them to rest and refuel.

Materials:

- Small bowl
- Tray (an old container lid works great!)
- Rocks
- Fruits and citrus

1. Create a water station

Fill the small bowl with water and arrange the rocks to provide a landing pad for pollinators to rest while grabbing a drink of water.

2. Prepare a sweet treat

Arrange slices of orange, berries and even overripe bananas on the tray. Pollinators will enjoy snacking on their sweet juice.

By creating a Pit Stop, you can help our pollinators take a much-deserved break and watch as bees, butterflies and maybe even hummingbirds stop by!

Botanical Wonders of Eastern Turkey

May 8-21

Explore the steppes of Turkey with Curator of Steppe Collections Mike Bone and renowned plantsman Christopher Gardener. Turkey is at a convergence of two different floristic regions, the Mediterranean and the steppes of Asia. The result is an incredibly diverse plant palette. Begin in Cappadocia with its ancient cultural and geological wonders and floral treasures. Then explore the montane steppe in eastern Turkey, where many transition zones give rise to wildflower displays. Travel through Turkic villages and explore mountains and fertile valleys in search of natural wonders.

Magical Mexico: Oaxaca

July 18-23

Experience La Guelaguetza, the colorful celebration that brings together Oaxaca's 16 ethnolinguistic groups, who share their unique dances and traditions in a dazzling display of cultural pride. Then explore Oaxaca's rich artistic and culinary heritage. From meeting skilled artisans in nearby villages to participating in a traditional cooking class, this curated tour immerses you in the heart of Oaxaca's culture. Join Reefs to Rockies and Associate Director of Community Relations Yvonne Garcia Bardwell for this opportunity to experience the true spirit of La Guelaguetza and the vibrant traditions that make Oaxaca unforgettable.

Cape Floral Region Botanical Safari with Optional Game Reserve Extension

Main tour: September 15-25

Extension: September 25-29

The Cape Floral Region of South Africa is celebrated worldwide for its fascinating and diverse plant life—more than 9,000 species in all, over two-thirds of which are only found there. South Africa is renowned for its dynamic and evocative contemporary art scene, world-class galleries and museums. Associate Director of Learning Engagement and Interpretation Hannah Craft leads a botanical safari to the Cape's sculpture gardens, picturesque estates in the Cape Winelands, the incomparable Kirstenbosch Botanical Garden and the five-star eco-paradise Grootbos Private Nature Reserve. An optional extension explores Phinda Private Reserve, a stunning landscape with lions, leopards, elephants, Cape buffaloes and rhinos.

Magical Mexico: Mérida

October 29 – November 4

Experience the magic of Mérida with Denver Botanic Gardens on a journey blending rich Mayan culture, gastronomy and history. Celebrate Día de los Muertos, explore the legacy of salt and sisal industries, and discover the secrets of Yucatán's renowned honey production. This immersive trip offers a sensory feast, connecting you to the heart of Mayan Mexico. Denver Botanic Gardens' Associate Director of Community Relations Yvonne Garcia Bardwell hosts.

VOLUNTEER WITH US!

The Volunteer Services team is gearing up for a busy spring season – a perfect time to join us as an ongoing volunteer! Volunteers support horticulture, educational programming, the visitor experience and so much more. For more information on the Gardens' volunteer program and specific details on both ongoing and special event volunteer opportunities at York Street, Chatfield Farms and Plains Conservation Center please visit us at Denver Botanic Gardens Volunteer Program or email us at vol@botanicgardens.org.

NEW TICKETING SYSTEM

Beginning March 19, we're launching a new ticketing system, designed for a smoother and more intuitive online experience. Your membership details, including level and expiration date, will be automatically transferred. Denver Botanic Gardens Mobile App will be discontinued. However, you'll be able to save your membership card and tickets to your Apple or Google Wallet.

Keep an eye on your email for details. If you have questions, our Resource Center is here to help at 720-865-3500. Thank you for your patience during this transition and we look forward to sharing this new experience with you!
